“Salmon-pink; a very good rosé, with a scented bouquet of cherry, nougat and rose petals, the palate with both flavour and texture, built around fluffy acidity (an unusual term, I know) prolonging the finish”.

“Sangiovese is suited to making light-bodied, slightly drier rosés. Made in the traditional way to preserve the fruit, this Margaret River rosé has light floral aromas with a trace of cherry and raspberry. But it’s quite dry and savoury on the palate with a fine, lingering acid. A well-crafted quality rosé”.

“Pale salmon-coloured rosé out of Margaret River. Texture, refreshment, zippy flavour. You can’t ask for much more. Tastes of pippy strawberry and dried herbs. Has a savoury element but it mostly tastes of red summer berries. Fresh fennel too. Very summery. Won’t go far wrong with this one”.
